The annual FEATS festival has moved between different host cities each year since 1976. In 2010 it's coming to Bad Homburg again, for the fourth time, and theatre groups from around Europe will be converging on the Kurtheater over the Ascension weekend from 13-16 May. The four-day festival sees three one-act plays each evening, by both famous and up-and-coming authors, being performed in a spirit of friendly competition. A professional adjudicator keeps his or her eye closely on each play, awarding marks for various aspects of the performance and providing a public critique afterwards of what he/she has seen. After the last play of the festival, prizes for the best production, the best actor and actress as well as stage management and original script are awarded.

When FEATS comes to town, there is a rare opportunity to experience talented actors and actresses presenting twelve very different plays in Bad Homburg at the biggest and best English language theatre festival in continental Europe - variety is guaranteed. The fun long weekend is complemented by a free Fringe programme at which smaller productions and theatre workshops are held. Evening tickets are just €17 each, with discounts available for season tickets and groups, and can be booked online. Much more information is available from the dedicated website at:
